Building stronger futures, together

StriveTogether is the nation's largest network of place-based partnerships. Place-based partnerships connect nonprofits, businesses, schools, philanthropy and more, bringing together neighbors to build a stronger future for their community.

Cradle to Career Network members change the way their communities work together by building connections, sharing resources and using data to put more young people on a path to economic mobility. This work strengthens a community's civic infrastructure — the way a community comes together to hold itself collectively accountable for supporting young people.

Together, we help young people meet cradle-to-career milestones so that they have the opportunities they need to reach their goals, and, ultimately, thrive.

A path to economic mobility

Our network members get better results for youth from cradle to career, measuring key milestones to track their progress.

These seven milestones are critical steps on the path to economic mobility. For instance, when students have what they need to be proficient in reading by the end of third grade, they're four times more likely to complete high school.¹ Individuals supported to complete high school earn about 23% more than individuals who don't graduate.² And for each level of education reached after high school, earning potential increases.³

Our approach: The Theory of Action™

Continually evolving with lessons from the network, the StriveTogether Theory of Action™ is a proven framework for building civic infrastructure and transforming the systems that shape opportunity.

Challenge

StriveTogether Theory of Action™ Solution

Working on symptoms, not root causes

Shared community vision: Communities come together around common goals and shift policies, practices, resources and power structures.

Lack of clarity about what's working or how to scale

Evidence-based decision making: Data gives communities insights to improve strategies and make smarter investments.

Working in silos

Collaborative action: Community leaders work together using data to change practices and policies to support youth.

Searching for silver bullet solutions

Investment and sustainability: Communities use data to allocate resources for the greatest impact.
